

PRIME MINISTER

FOR PRESS

18 March 1976

GOVERNMENT PARTIES NEW COMMITTEE SYSTEM

The Government Parties' new committee system began operating this week.

There are 13 Standing Committees covering all Ministerial areas, and two special committees dealing with electoral tactics and Parliamentary reform. Details of the committees are attached.

The new arrangements - recommended by a committee appointed under the chairmanship of Senator F.M. Chaney - are designed to give Liberal and National Country Party Members and Senators maximum opportunity to contribute to the processes of government.

The committees will examine legislation and assist with the development of policy. In actively seeking to forge and maintain outside links, the committees will also play an important part in the two-way channel of communication between the Government and the community at large. They will consult with representatives of relevant outside bodies, and also with the respective Party organisations. The Secretariats of the Government Parties will assist with the servicing of the new committee system.

The committees will report to the Party Room after consultation with appropriate Ministers. In some cases, the final review of Bills will take place at meetings convened by the Standing Committees rather than in the full Joint Party Meeting.

The committees' work will be co-ordinated by a "Chairman's Group", chaired by Senator Chaney, and comprising the chairmen of the various committees.

The committees can play a positive and constructive part in good government. In particular, they will enable the Government to get maximum value from the considerable reservoir of talent and experience on its large backbench.
