18 NOVEMBER 1986

I will attend the 1987 Davos Symposium of the World Economic Forum in Switzerland.

The Symposium is widely recognised as the most important annual gathering of the world's business and economic leaders. It is to be attended by around 800 senior business people, bankers and administrators from top companies and organisations and senior Government figures from around the world.

I have accepted an invitation from the organisers to present the opening keynote address to the Symposium on Thursday 29 January.

The Symposium is a unique meeting of eminent and influential people, and as such, offers a venue for informal discussions with business and Government leaders from those nations most important to much of Australia's trade and investment.
